DESCRIPTION

Now is a time when the architecture profession can evolve into a new leadership role through the creation of firms based on ever-broadening skills, talents, interests and perceptions. The profession and the public benefit from firms that are responsive to the changing paradigms of practice. An entrepreneurial architect can create a vehicle for delivering professional services to a diverse group of clients in an environment where changes to the architectural practice are revolutionary. Getting started as a new firm comes with many pitfalls that require careful consideration and prudent planning. This session helps architects recognize the skills and decisions needed to start a firm on the road to success.
