DESCRIPTION

The development of communities in Los Angeles and New York has been fueled in part by transit network expansions. Rather than yielding cookie-cutter solutions, transit-supported growth can bring innovative designs that are true to a city's history and identity. This session will explore key questions including: How is each city addressing transportation expansion? How are they promoting transit-oriented development projects in different corridors? What's on the horizon over the next 10 years? Transit investments can transform communities. This session will leave you feeling as though you've experienced key projects-and inspire you to visit and tour them.
